"....On the Edge of Eternity".

(The above photograph of William Joyce appeared in the original 1941 German language version of his book, Dammerung Uber England, of Twilight Over England: The Path to Democracy is the Road to Oblivion, printed by Internationaler Verlag Cesare Santoro, Berlin.)

"When some major religious or political struggle terminates in the decisive victory of one side or the other, it is inevitable that thereafter all history will be written from the winning side".

This now self evident fact is quoted from the foreword to Jane Lane's The Reign of King Covenant and is as true today as it has always been; only the means of broadcasting it has become, via "modern technology", so comprehensive and the truth so circumscribed that it has become the first duty of all honest men to do their necessarily censored best to ensure that "truth will out...." despite all efforts to stifle it consistently made by those evil "establishments", masquerading as lawful governments, in every corner of the world where the minions of Satan are in position to exercise their arcane power.

One "honest" man who took this duty so determinedly that its pursuit led to his martyrdom* was William Joyce, the fifty-first anniversary of whose execution for treason was on January 3, of this year. Therefore we think it appropriate to recall the true circumstances of his dedicated life and heroic death, since the ubiquitous "media of communication" have lately resurrected the lies originally spread, during the Second World War, concerning his efforts to enlighten the capitalist/communist directed peoples, euphemistically termed, "The United Nations", of their certain enslavement by that same cap/con money-power so soon as its only effective opponents could be destroyed. "The opposition" being the "anti-semitic monster", Adolf Hitler and his fascist ally, Mussolini and all their volunteer abettors from any nation on earth, i.e. in the Frei Korps.

William Brooke Joyce was born on 24 April 1906 in New York, the son of an American citizen of Irish extraction and an English mother, he moved to Ireland with his family in 1909. Educated in Catholic schools although his mother was a Protestant, Joyce had inherited his family sympathies for the pro-British loyalists.

In 1921 he moved to England where he attended Birbeck College from 1923 to 1927 emerging with a First Class Honours degree in English. In December 1923 Joyce had joined the British Fascisti a small ultra-conservative group. On the evening of October 22, 1924, Joyce was responsible for the stewarding at Lambeth Baths of a meeting in support of the Unionist Parliamentary candidate for Lambeth North. They were expecting trouble from communists and soon the anticipated fracas developed. During the confusion a Communist leaped upon Joyce's back and tried to slash his throat with a razor. The razor missed its target but Joyce received a slash across the right cheek from the corner of his mouth to behind his ear. The next day the name of William Joyce made its first appearance in the newspapers.

After several years of watching the political scene Joyce decided to throw in his lot with Sir Oswald Mosley's British Union of Fascists. In 1934 Joyce became Director of Propaganda of the BUF. At the time A.K. Chesterton was to write: "William Joyce, brilliant writer, speaker, and exponent of policy, has addressed hundreds of meetings, always at his best, always revealing the iron spirit of Fascism in his refusal to be intimidated by violent opposition." His popularity grew within the British Union but his growing disillusion with Mosley led to a rift when the Headquarters staff was cut for financial reasons and he left in 1937 to found the new National Socialist League with John Beckett and Angus MacNab. This tiny group made no impact at all but along with his involvement with the Nordic League and the Right Club was to occupy Joyce until the fateful journey to Germany on the eve of World War II in 1939.

For William Joyce there could now be no turning

How men who play high stakes trip up over trifles

It is an appropriate moment to tell this story. For talk of treason dominates the news—and the tale that is now disclosed drives home the lesson that a man cannot serve two loyalties. . . .

by A. K. CHESTERTON

WILLIAM JOYCE was an American citizen when he began to broadcast for the Germans, but was adjudged guilty of high treason to Britain because, having entered Germany with a British passport, he was considered still to owe allegiance to the British Crown.

One of his friends, after sentence of death had been pronounced, begged him to rejoin the Catholic Church which he had left at the age of 16.

"No, old chap; I cannot do that," replied Joyce. "I am being ushered out of this world on the strength of a false passport. It would not be well for me to seek admission to the next world with a passport which would be equally false."

Self-possessed

THERE CAN have been but few men who approached the scaffold with such wit and icy self-possession. Yet, in the stillness of the prison night, Joyce must have reflected with bitterness that, had a supposedly influential German friend been as good as his word, the fatal passport would have been invalidated some days before the war began. He had left England assured of immediate German citizenship.

His closest personal friend, John Angus Macnab, spent his 1939 summer holiday in Berlin.

"See Christian Bauer while you are there," Joyce had requested of him, "and find out whether, if I come to Germany, naturalisation will be available to me without delay."

The goodbye

BAUER was on the staff of Goebbels' paper Der Angriff, and also had some kind of position in the Ministry of Propaganda.

Ten days before war began, Macnab returned to London and reported to Joyce.

"Bauer has seen Goebbels, who promises you and Margaret immediate citizenship should you go to Germany."

Forty-eight hours later a small group gathered on Victoria Station to bid the Joyces good-bye.

"Blimey," said the porter who read the word "Berlin" on their luggage labels, "that's a rum sort of place to be going to in these days."

"Oh, I expect everything will blow over," replied Joyce lightly.

"Well, there's nothing like being a bit optimistic, is there?" ruminated the porter.

Next morning—a Sunday—the couple were borne by taxi through the almost empty streets of Berlin to their modest hotel. Joyce lost no time in telephoning Bauer.

This line was engaged. He rang again and again. At last he got through.

"Hullo, Christian! We've arrived," he said, relieved to hear his friend's voice.

There was a silence.

A gasp...

WILLIAM and Margaret," explained Joyce.

There was a noise which sounded very like a gasp of dismay.

"I had your message to say it would be all right if I judged the time had come," continued Joyce. "I think the time has come." Bauer received the news without enthusiasm.

That night, entertaining the Joyces to dinner, Bauer said to them:—

"If there is no war, it will be lovely having you here. But should there be war, I'm afraid you'll both be interned."

What now?

WELL," commented William Joyce, after a pause, "that would at least keep us out of harm's way. I take it we would be interned together."

"Not so," said Bauer. "Margaret would be sent to a women's camp."

Next day Bauer had vanished into the maw of the German Army.

"So much for immediate naturalisation!" said Joyce to his wife when he returned from the phone. "And so much for immediate employment. What do we do now?"

"Darling, I'm frightened," said Margaret Joyce. "If I have to be imprisoned, at least let me be imprisoned somewhere where I can understand the language."

"My dear," replied Joyce, "if you think we should go back to England, then back we'll go."

His wife reflected "There's really nothing else to do," she said at last.

The Joyces, in search of advice, presented themselves at the British Embassy. The Embassy was busy packing, and in any case this was a question for the Consulate. But the routine at the Consulate was coming to an end.

'We stay...'

GOING as far as Cologne," officials advised them. "The British Consul there may have some suggestions."

But supposing he hadn't! Internment in Cologne would be certain, whereas in Berlin there might be a chance of official acceptance.

"Darling," said Margaret, regaining her not inconsiderable courage, "we shall have to stay and see this thing through—here in Germany."

This was the decision taken. Or did events decide? Three weeks later, the German radio hired Joyce, not as a brain but as a voice. The Germans discovered that he had a brain.

Divorce...

WILLIAM JOYCE was a little fey. He soon began to hear within him the bugle-blast of doom. It played havoc with his nerves.

He reacted by making unendurable the life of the woman whom he deeply loved. He quarrelled incessantly with her, picked to pieces everything she said and flew into towering rages.

Margaret Joyce tried to understand what so deeply troubled him. Being an intelligent woman, she probably succeeded. But that did not make his outbursts easier to endure. When they finally became intolerable she left him. They were divorced.

It was a strange divorce. The couple celebrated it by lunching and dining together. Rarely a week passed when they did not meet for lunch or dinner.

...Remarriage

THEY drifted together again, and then it seemed absurd not to remarry. But that was more difficult. To get a divorce had meant filling in three forms; to remarry, over 30 forms had to be filled in. At length the business was completed. They were remade man and wife.

Almost at once Joyce's dreadful outbursts of temper began all over again, but this time his wife determined to put up with them. She knew that they were caused by his overwhelming sense of doom.

That Joyce himself knew what was wrong is suggested by his inscription of a copy of his book, published in 1941, to the German official who supervised his work. He wrote:—

"From Faust to Mephistopheles."

But it was not Mephistopheles who exacted the price. That was done by a judge and jury at the Old Bailey.

'Brave man'

WHEN the fatal sentence was passed nothing remained for William Joyce but to make the best possible exit from the world where, for all his intellect, he had behaved like a headstrong and very confused child. He did it better than he had ever done anything before.

One of his brothers, suffering from a temporary infection of the glands, visited him in the condemned cell with his neck swathed in bandages.

"Tut, tut!" Joyce chided. "Fancy coming to see me like that! Don't you know that necks are a very sensitive subject in this part of the world?"

Such was his spirit on the edge of eternity.

Professing to be British of the British, Joyce left us at the first great crisis and joined our enemies. We owe him no honour. But we do not dishonour ourselves by acknowledging that he died as a brave man.

What is more, although he refused that Catholic passport, he died reconciled to the Christian faith.

"I am proud to die for my ideals; and I am sorry for the sons of Britain who have died without knowing why."

William Joyce.

back. His justification being, "If an Englishman cannot fight in his own streets against the domination of international finance it were better for him to go elsewhere and impede by every means in his power the victory of his Government; for the victory of such a Government would be an everlasting defeat of his race: it would put an end to all prospects forever of social justice and economic reform."

From 1939 to 1945 William Joyce broadcast regularly for the German Reichsrundfunk. As the war turned against Germany Joyce became more desperate and the broadcasts more insistent. On April 30th, 1945, "Lord Haw-Haw" stepped before the microphone for the last time.

Joyce was taken prisoner near Flensburg soon after and stood trial at the Old Bailey, charged with treason, in late '45. The question of Joyce's nationality was not permitted to get in the way of a guilty verdict. To quote A.K.'s article, "When the fatal sentence was passed nothing remained for William Joyce but to make the best possible exit from the world, where for all his intellect, he had behaved like a headstrong and very confused child. He did it better than he had ever done anything before. One of his brothers, suffering from a temporary infection of the glands, visited him in the condemned cell with his neck swathed in bandages. "Tut, tut!" Joyce chided. "Fancy coming to see me like that! Don't you know that necks are a very sensitive subject in this part of the world." Such was his spirit on the edge of eternity...."

William Joyce was hanged at Wandsworth prison on 3 January, 1946. His family finally, after many years, persuaded the authorities to give them his remains and William Joyce now lies at peace in Galway, Ireland.

TRAVESTY IN THE HISS-TORY

The Daily Telegraph on Saturday, 16th November, 1996 reported the death of the "Diplomat who advised Roosevelt and always denied treachery" thus: "HISS, THE SPY NAMED BY NIXON, DIES AT 92". After some two hundred words of partial whitewash by innuendo we learn that although convicted of perjury and spending "almost four years behind bars", there was no trial for spying "because the statute of limitations had expired". We are told that it was at "the height of the McCarthy witch hunt in 1948" that Alger Hiss was convicted on two counts so of course no one could believe him guilty then could they? However the last part of the obituary by Michael Kallenbach was just factual: Hiss had been adviser to President Roosevelt "in his dealings with Stalin and Churchill at the Yalta conference, and at the Dumbarton Oaks meeting which helped to lay the foundation for the United Nations, Hiss was elected executive secretary.... He left government (sic) in 1946 to take up the presidency of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace".

So it was all there was it not? Even though, "seen through a glass darkly". Even the most recent peruser of the pages of Candour cannot help knowing (if it had not been at least "under the rose" before) what transpired at Yalta and Dumbarton Oaks and the Carnegie Foundation's "charitable" cover was blown sky high by the astute and courageous Mr Norman Dodd of Reece Committee fame. (See Candour passim)

There are two books in particular which tell the treacherous tale of Alger Hiss, the master spy who was "so charming" that no one wanted to believe him guilty of any crime and certainly not treason. The two books are: Perjury by Allen Weinstein and Witness by Whittaker Chambers. The former obviously holds the majority view of the "witch hunting McCarthy" but cannot really exonerate the charming Alger of lying in his teeth as long as he could and admitting only to faulty memories when the truth persisted in coming to the surface, but as most of the lies were repeated on oath it was impossible not to admit perjury. The second author, was of course the "witness", having been a clandestine member of the Communist Party during the 1930's when he was a colleague of Hiss who was also an "underground Communist agent".

To any other but confirmed One Worlders, the "witness" of Whittaker Chambers was and is absolutely damning, but since "the Conspirators" have still not attained their expected triumph of Zion, the Messianic aim of the Jewish race, media co-operation in the maintenance of misinformation must necessarily continue. Since the evils resulting from the post war setting up of internationalist political and usurious financial operations are so obvious to all history and political students of enquiring minds disposed to uncover the truth, it is plain that such honest and determined researchers must be in such a minority among the "great British Public" that their observations can be, and are most often dismissed as the delusions of notoriety-seeking cranks. Thus, the media can continue to produce the same "victor's history" on every suitable significant date regardless of the undeniable evidence of its original perversion.

The treason of Alger Hiss is revealed and underlined by his career in and out of "Government" as retailed in the partisan exposition of "the Hiss-Chambers case" in Allen Weinstein's book Perjury; first published in 1978. The book begins by describing the contemporary dubious reputation of that "unloved and unpredictable Committee" (for investigating un-American activities - HUAC) which in 1948, was "lying low" because "its tarnished reputation made it vulnerable.... and Truman aides drafted a Bill to abolish the Committee if the November election restored Democratic control of Congress". So: "lying low the Committee planned no major new probes before the election". However, "only at the last minute did the Committee decide to hear a witness who had testified days earlier before a Senate investigating Committee".

The witness was Elizabeth Bentley a former courier for Communist agents who had first approached J. Edgar Hoover (Director of the F.B.I.) in 1945. "Hoover had deluged President Truman, Attorney General Tom Clark and others, in 1945 and 1946, with memos detailing Bentley's allegations of widespread Soviet espionage, but the administration had taken no action, perhaps the informant offered no corroboration of her story".

"Bentley named names"; among them were Lauchlin Currie, who had served as top assistant to President Franklin Roosevelt, and Harry Dexter White, former Secretary of the Treasury, chief architect of the World Bank and after 1946, Director of the International Monetary Fund. Still, as no corroboration was yet offered, "Truman dismissed the accusations as false and politically motivated". However, HUAC at last produced an alleged "not too co-operative witness", in August, 1948. The witness - Whittaker Chambers ultimately gave evidence at a Public Hearing where he described his activities during his membership of the Communist Party and service in its "underground", chiefly in Washington D.C.. He defected from the Party in 1938 and had lived in hiding in fear of reprisals by the Communists whom he firmly believed would try to kill him, since of course, he could identify the top level of the underground group he served. The group included Alger Hiss who, as a member of the State Department had passed copies of secret documents to the Soviets and later organised the conference of Dumbarton Oaks, San Francisco and the United States side of the Yalta conference.... for the purpose of this article we need no further evidence to establish Hiss's treason than the facts that: at Yalta he was the only other participant at the private meeting of Roosevelt with Stalin when they carved up defeated Germany and collaborated in the "Cold War": he played a major part at Bretton Woods and thus helped to put the world in thrall to both the United Nations Organisation and the International Monetary Fund, after which "he left government to become Director of the Carnegie Endowment Fund for International Peace", the so called Charitable Trust whose subversive nature has been revealed in all its long term treason by Norman Dodd and the Reece Committee.

There remains Whittaker Chambers' evidence in his courageous contribution in the cause of Truth in history: his little known book, Witness, first published in 1953 by Andre Deutsch Limited, dedicated by the author: "To my wife, infinitely loving and infinitely beloved," and prefaced by a quotation from Hamlet, Act One, Scene I:

Horatio: "If thou art privy to thy country's fate, which happily,
foreknowing may avoid,
O speak ----

BSE and the secret societies

BSE or the mad cow epidemic and the confusion surrounding it are a symptom of something more than rotten in the state of the western world. Confusion is always a sign of the proximity of the Devil and the rare glimpses allowed the public of what is going on behind the scenes only confirm the probability of his presence. The output of lies per official statement in this matter is probably an all-time high and the identity of the Prince of liars is well known.

In the Vienna newspaper taglichAlles (10/10/96) the European Union (EU) was, not for the first time, accused of falsifying and silencing truth. According to this paper, the German expert, Professor Sogomyi, in a statement to the Union's BSE Research Committee, said he had already in 1993, informed the Expert Veterinaries Committee of the risk to human beings of contracting BSE and had demanded the slaughter of all infected animals. His statement was removed from the minutes of the meeting. Later, the former Agricultural Commisar Steichen complained to the German Minister of Health that an official German Government representative should "compromise EU interests". Despite the warning of the reality of the risk by the British experts, Lacey and Bostock, EU silence on the matter remained unbroken until April this year (1996). An Austrian M.P. commenting on the incident assumed that the EU, aware of the risk to human beings, kept it dark to protect business interests.

An even more open example of EU methods of handling truth was reported by the French daily Present (6/7/96). This paper recalled that the French Front National Deputy, Jean-Claude Martinez, had wanted to raise the BSE question in the French Chamber of Deputies as long ago as June 1990, but the President of the Chamber had cancelled the time assigned to him for this intervention. Four months later, in October 1990, the European Committees Consumers' Commission published what the same paper describes as an "incredible" text containing the following statements. "It is necessary to adopt a cool attitude (to BSE) so as not to provoke unfavourable market reactions.... Say no more about BSE.... This point should not appear on the agenda." The same text read as well, "We are going to present an official request to the United Kingdom asking them not to publish the results of their researches." and finally, "Generally speaking we must play down this BSE affair by practising disinformation (sic). It is better to say that the press tends to exaggerate." Needless to say this text was intended for internal circulation only.

The foregoing information, culled from two press clippings which happen to be to hand shows that the EU and the Communities before it had, or have, "interests" incompatible with public awareness of the implications of the BSE epidemic and would seem therefore to give priority to these interests over the protection of Europeans from the danger of possible transmission of the disease to human beings. In his comment on the scrupulous discretion shown by the EU, the M.P. referred to above said that the EU's first concern in this matter was the protection of "business" interests although in point of fact the interests in question have nowhere been identified.

Indeed, there is nothing very clear about this epidemic and the actions and attitudes of the authorities involved are to say the least unusual. It is treated on all sides as though it were an act of God. Farmers are promised compensation at public expense for losses for which no one is held responsible. Mention is seldom made of the millers who produced the contaminated animal feed said to cause the disease or of the health inspectorate who apparently overlooked the reduction by the millers of the temperature to which they heated the contaminated carcasses used as an ingredient of their meal below the 350 C. minimum necessary for their decontamination. The reluctance to make the epidemic known or to take preventive measures was no less strange. When, finally, the British Minister of Health informed the public of the possibility of contagion through consumption of beef his emergency advocacy of the slaughter of all British cows could hardly have been expected not to create panic. Both his statement and the resulting panic were moreover unwarranted since the existence of the risk was only a possibility. The first person to put an embargo on British beef was the French Minister of Agriculture and if this measure, taken later by other countries and the EU as well could be deemed a reasonable precaution, the same could not be said of his condemnation of all British calves despite the statements of experts that the disease was not found in young animals. The same inconsistency appeared in the decisions taken by the EU agricultural ministers at Luxemburg (reported in the Viennese paper Alles of 1/11/96) to give farmers a bonus of the equivalent of 2,500 Austrian schillings for every bull calf slaughtered before it was twenty days old.

If much of the BSE episode is, whether deliberately or not, shrouded in confusion, what is abundantly clear is that the consequences of the epidemic all tend in the same direction, namely, to the prejudice chiefly of British but also other advanced countries' agriculture and this gives credibility to an explanation put forward in the French monthly Bulletin de l'Occident Chretien (No. 30, June-July 1996). This journal sets the matter in supranational perspective. It begins by recalling the prognostic of Copin Albancelli, authority on Freemason strategy, who writing at the beginning of the century, said that the Revolution or revolutionary process, which was taking the world ever faster to the left, would end when Jewish and British interests came into conflict, as it had begun and progressed while their interests coincided.

The interests of the two nations, according to the author of the article, began to diverge with the era of decolonisation. Already in the 1920's, Jewish collaborators of the young Gandhi, at that time in South Africa defending the interests of Indian immigrants, taught him the non-violence method he applied later to win the independence of India. The Irish problem and the attacks on the Royal Family should be seen in the light of the same Anglo-Jewish tension reflected also in the overall endeavour of the Occult Power - as far as it is possible to divine the aims of powers that work in the dark - to create a vast single Europe reaching from the Atlantic to the Urals as one of the provinces of a future new world order and world empire.

The integration of the western and eastern nations of Europe would, however, be impossible as long as, on the one hand, the western nations, in particular, Great Britain, France and the Netherlands, remained each at the head of a world empire and, on the other, the countries of Central and Eastern Europe, Poland, Hungary, Romania and the new States issued from former European Russia remained bankrupted by 50 to 75 years of Communism. Thus, while the dismemberment of the British Empire continued, the revival of the economy of eastern Europe (the PECO countries) through agricultural development should be pursued.

It was in this scenario that the BSE scare had its place (And if it did not exist, it had to be invented. Ed.). Markets for east European produce had to be found. For the time being, western countries had no need of the eastern countries' products. French grain and British beef were enough to meet European requirements. Great Britain, for example, exported 15 per cent of French consumption, 10 per cent of German. But the compulsory slaughter of British beef (though not scientifically justified) would create demand for eastern farmers' output. It was assumed that the British would submit and beg Europe to refund the farmers' losses. In the end, it had come to a tug-of-war between the British and the Occult power directing the overall project, the latter insisting on the slaughter before it lifted the embargo....

The foregoing explanation fits both the facts and the assumed interests involved, as well as what is known of various more or less secret societies planning rival world governments for the year 2002, or thereabouts. Whether this analysis is correct or not, whether BSE is or is not transmissible from animals to human beings, the grotesque attempts of national and European authorities to keep the public in ignorance of the truth or deliberately disinforming, show that in national as well as in international affairs today the secret societies, whether the Occult Power, Freemasonry, the Jewish Kahal, or their many offshoots and progeny are the principal executive organs of the unnamed Establishment that rules the modern world.

In this context three points in particular are worth noting: first, secret societies, by definition self-seeking, are therefore necessarily destructive of established order; secondly, Europe and the secret societies cannot both survive indefinitely because Europeans, begotten of the civilisation they have created, are as instinctively justice-loving and freedom-oriented as the members of secret societies are bound in blind obedience to the occult master they serve, and thirdly, for the secret societies POWER AND PROFIT HAVE PRIORITY OVER THE COMMON GOOD.

Europeans and all peoples who wish to save or recover what can be saved of their way of life and traditional values would be unwise not to give serious thought to the problem of the secret societies. The classic example of the result of tolerating secret societies was provided by the Chinese Empire when, after several thousand years' existence, unable to rid itself of them, like a massive wooden structure solid in appearance but riddled with worms, it fell crumbling to the ground.

More Travesty in Alleged History

Suez 1956 - The Times newspaper 29.7.1996.

Quote: "Suez was the moment when the British came down to earth with a bump.... The decade after the Second World War had been grim at home and abroad, but the after glow of victory had sustained British morale through rationing, the outbreak of the Cold War and the start of withdrawal from Empire. By the mid-fifties it seemed that prosperity was returning...."

The Times resumed: "Suez changed all that. Yet it could not have happened but for the hubris of one man. The Prime Minister, Anthony Eden suffered in an acute form from the Churchill complex shared by many of his generation". The Times went on to say that Harold Macmillan encouraged Eden to make a secret pact with Israel which both Eden and Foreign Secretary, Selwyn Lloyd "were obliged to deny in public once British Forces were engaged in Egypt". Then, Macmillan helped to sabotage the entire policy by raising the spectre of the collapse of sterling".

Earlier, on the 26th July, 1996, The Times reporter, John Young, in a "potted history" claimed that when Nasser, newly elected President of Egypt, nationalised the Suez Canal, his action "destroyed Britain's Prime Minister, bitterly divided its people and all but bankrupted the Exchequer, estranged it from its closest allies" (Who were they? Ed.) "Ended any hopes of peaceful co-existence between Israel and its Arab neighbours; (whenever have the massacred had "peaceful relations with the massacre-ers? Ed.) "set in train the dismemberment of the Empire; and brought the world close to nuclear war".

And so on, and so on: The American Jewish lobby succeeded in portraying Nasser as a fanatic; the French still had their North African colonies, notably Algeria, and believed Nasser to be the principle supplier of arms to the Algerian rebels; the French and Israeli leaders met in great secrecy at Sevres, outside Paris, where they were joined by Selwyn Lloyd - Foreign Secretary, and Patrick Dean, Chairman of the Joint Intelligence Committee set up to "undermine Nasser". The Jewish forces were alleged to have occupied Sinai in order to take the Canal Zone so that the British and French could afterwards intervene "to keep the peace"....

So what was the truth about this pretty little story that brought "Britain Down With a Bump" from her cosy post-war recovery?

In 1953 Candour first saw the light of day. A.K. Chesterton, who had volunteered in 1916, coming from South Africa for the purpose, fought on the Western Front to the storming of the Hindenburg Line and was awarded the Military Cross for his services, in 1953 issued a pamphlet entitled "Truth Has Been Murdered" (That forthright magazine had been sold to the enemy). R.K. Jeffries, a millionaire Truth subscriber, resident in Chile, having received the pamphlet donated the initial finance for the introduction of Candour on the newsletter scene. They did not do these things and find other stalwarts such as Elizabeth, Lady Freeman and Admiral Sir Barry Domville to join them, because "prosperity was returning to Britain" but because with the demise of Truth had gone the last regular publication dedicated to informing its readers that not only truth but the country for which they had fought was intended to be destroyed together with the community of nations and colonies that made up her Empire - a name not yet derogated by the minions of the New World Order, a projected organisation as yet but a bastard in the Cap/Com womb.

Candour readers know that Eden had always been an Internationalist in the 1930's and that Churchill had in the 1930's become a willing tool of Bernard Mannes Baruch, master usurer and sometimes called "The Uncrowned King of the United States".

In 1956, Candour was reporting that: we had Eden "jumping the gun" by sending British troops to the Canal Zone for no national reason but to "establish an International Police Force there". (That was his declared intention then though many have forgotten it now) It was for that that he got his Internationalist ear swiped by Eisenhower, Baruch's pawn President of the United States, for whose master, the entry of the 'Gladiolus' was a little too presumptuous - there was to be no doubt about who called the tunes in the opening operetta performed on the International stage. A hundred million pounds worth of British property was lying abandoned in the Canal Zone and the Israelis had the Sinai to bargain with. What a useful piece of desert that turned out to be! And all that happened not owing to the machinations of MacMillan and Foster Dulles - as yet only 'bit' players in the World Design - even smaller than Eden. "The Gladiolus" performed his about turn because he was peremptorily ordered to withdraw the British troops from the Canal Zone (which they were on the point of taking) on pain of stringent economic sanctions being imposed on Great Britain by the order of the President of the United States! The command was telephoned at 2am British Time by President Eisenhower in person....

That information was retailed by Field Marshall Montgomery at a private meeting of British Army officers later in 1956.

And that is why Anthony Eden retired with a nervous breakdown....

Sunday Times - 29.9.96

Headline

"US Blacks Get Hooked on Conspiracy"

"Ludicrous claims of agents flooding ghettos with crack (cocaine), feed America's sense that someone else is to blame", says James Adams, the Sunday Times' columnist, who follows that by reporting that the San Jose Mercury News has accused the C.I.A. of organising the sale of tons of crack cocaine into America's ghettos in the 1980's.... Black Americans, he says have demanded an investigation. "Was the C.I.A. willing to poison our cities with crack cocaine to fund its private war in Central America? The Rev. Jesse Jackson asked last week".

There followed other allegations such as "That for over ten years the C.I.A. shipped tons of cocaine into black areas in Southern California".

"But," says James Adams, "this particular story is nonsense. There is no proof that the C.I.A. knowingly engaged in smuggling crack cocaine into America to help pay for the (contras) "war".

"The allegations have been investigated and dismissed....".

Candour's response....

The allegations have been investigated, he says -- "by most reputable news organisations".. Does he mean the majority of reputable organisations investigated or that "the organisations" investigating were "most reputable"? On the subject of respectable news media, A.K. Chesterton had something to say, and it was published in Candour on the morrow of his untimely death in 1973.

Under the title: The Greatest Lie he named upwards of fifty national and international companies and corporations covering every possible component in the industrial revolution from coal and oil to iron, steel, zinc, etc, to every kind of machine and propellant from the stratosphere to outer space supplied and fueled the Russian industries and armaments, "and all the while Capitalism was building up the Soviet Union, the Western media was thundering denunciations of Communist Russia. Yet the major role of the industrial giants was on so large a scale that it could not be hidden and must have been known to the national newspapers of every land. Why did they take so much trouble to conceal it from their readers? The answer I am sure, is not that they themselves were part of the conspiracy; but the fear of the pressure upon their advertisers could have driven them into bankruptcy."

"What Really Happened to the Nazis Looted Gold".

Labour M.P. Greville Janner, we learn has demanded that the Foreign Office release British archives on the Allied negotiations to recover the "looted" gold from Switzerland.

It is suggested:

a). Swiss bankers are alleged to have stolen up to $ 1 billion (today's value) of assets deposited by Jews who perished in the gas chambers. (sic).

b). The U.S. Treasury Department investigators "realised" that the Nazis had deposited ten times more gold than Germany legitimately possessed, so - the surplus was stolen from the Jews - "cela va sans dire".

c). Nazi bankers arriving in newly occupied European capitals had seized hundreds of gold bars, neatly stacked in the central banks of Paris, Brussels and The Hague, rendered them "incognito" and sent them by train to Berne.

d). The gold had been extracted from the teeth of Jews gassed in the extermination camps!!! Surely only bespoke "news" purveyors could put forth such a canard as that.

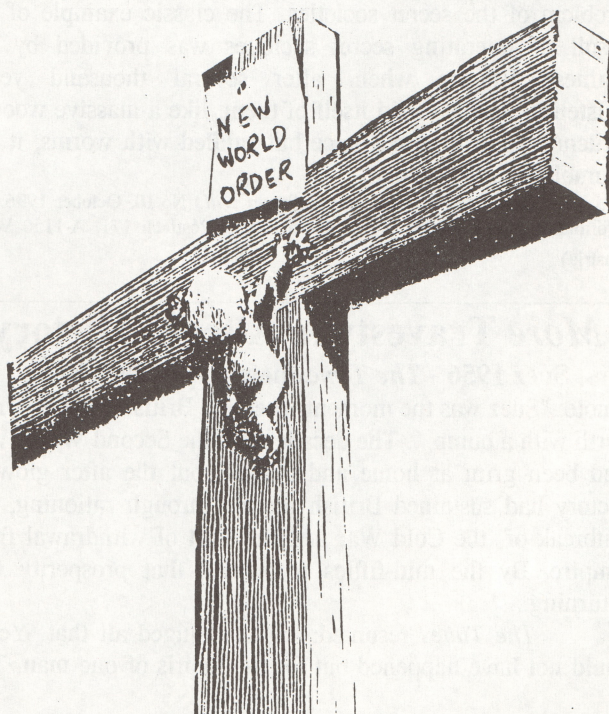

Two or three suggestions occur to us:

1. The Germans, at the time of the alleged looting and transfer of the spoils, were engaged in a major war which they expected to win. Wars cost money.

2. Should we perhaps have asked "the survivors" if their teeth were intact?

3. The ultimate victors "found" the records; so they might have as much authenticity as "the Holocaust" itself.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE....

Chesterton author's National Front past

by SEBASTIEN BERGER

A WRITER who has tried to counter the anti-Semitic reputation of G K Chesterton in a new biography is a former National Front officer and parliamentary candidate.

Joseph Pearce, author of Wisdom and Innocence, A Life of G K Chesterton, has served two prison terms for incitement to racial hatred.

Aidan Mackey, a key adviser on the book and the administrator of the Chesterton Study Centre, is also a former NF member.

Mr Pearce, 35, who converted to Roman Catholicism in 1989, did not tell his publishers, Hodder & Stoughton, about his past.

He became a National Front activist as a teenager and rose to be chairman of the Young National Front.

In 1987, he stood for the party at the Greenwich by-election, but later left after a power struggle.

During the early 1980s he ran the Young National Front's magazine Bulldog, and in 1985 he was jailed for six months for incitement to racial hatred.

Two years later he was found guilty of a similar offence and jailed for a year.

Mr Pearce, who was described in court as heading the party's education and training department, admitted editing Bulldog but denied that its content was an incitement to racial hatred.

He has also written a biography of a far-Right rock band, Skrewdriver: The First Ten Years, published in 1988.

In it, he described the band's lead singer, Ian Stuart, who was jailed for a year for stabbing a Nigerian outside King's Cross station, as a political prisoner.

Chesterton's own views were expressed in one of his verses:

*I am fond of Jews
Jews are fond of money
Never mind of whose.
I am fond of Jesus
Oh, but when they lose
Damn it all, it's funny.*

Mr Pearce, who spent four years researching the 500-page biography which concentrates on Chesterton's religious beliefs and conversion to Catholicism, wrote: "His attacks on the Jews were normally intended light-heartedly rather than heavy-handedly. It is clear that such verses may cause offence, but it is equally clear that they were not intended to do so."

Chesterton, above. Top and right: Joseph Pearce, who served jail terms, speaking on a National Front platform during a by-election campaign in 1982

Critics have given the book a lukewarm response. The Sunday Telegraph's reviewer, John Gross, said it needed "greater psychological depth", adding that the comments on Chesterton's work were "rudimentary". Last night, when told about Mr Pearce, he said:

"Obviously, he should have made his past clear in the book, because it has some bearing on the subject."

"There are sins of omission and he does sanitise Chesterton on anti-Semitism. He wants to put the best interpretation on it. It's not obnoxious though, nor is it a very good book."

Nonetheless, he thought Mr Pearce's interest was more likely to be driven by Chesterton's conversion to Catholicism than by his anti-Semitism. Mr Pearce, who now lives in Norwich, said: "I frankly admit my past. When I was young, I was an angry young man with some rather silly ideas."

"I have not an ounce of hatred for anybody, regardless of race, creed or colour. Anti-Semitism is wrong."

He said that since his conversion he had mellowed.

The brevity of his biography on the book jacket, he said, was due to his wanting his writing to speak for itself.

The Chesterton Centre's Mr Mackey knew Chesterton's nephew A K Chesterton and was on the executive of the League of Empire Loyalists.

The organisation was founded by A K Chesterton and merged into the National Front in the 1960s. Mr Mackey, who works at Westminster College, Oxford, described the merger as a "joining together of the respectable Right" and said he left when it became difficult to keep out the "nasty element".

He did not know Mr Pearce until his Chesterton researches began, and added: "It's a great pity that someone like Joe should be hounded for something that happened a very long time ago."

Hodder & Stoughton said that Mr Pearce's past would not affect their relationship.

Distant cousins: A K (left) and G K Chesterton

Was G K Chesterton anti-semitic?

Publicity earlier in the year presented G K Chesterton in the guise of a saint; the article by Sebastian Berger (December 1) featured him as an anti-semitic. Perhaps the truth lies somewhere in between the two, although in the past the two states were not always incompatible.

I suggest that it is time to tackle the anti-semitic charges levelled against Chesterton and to deliver a guilty or not-guilty verdict. In order to get the debate started, I offer the pages of The Chesterton Quarterly to anyone who would like to make the case for GKC as an anti-semitic, ie, someone who attacks Jews because of their race, which they cannot change, rather than because of personal behaviour which can be changed.

G K Chesterton had no nephews, so A K Chesterton was in fact a distant cousin — the K in their names stood for Keith, the surname of the Scottish part of the family. The two men have sometimes been confused, not least because there is an A K Chesterton Society seemingly allied to the National Front, as well as the Chesterton Society devoted to the works of GKC.

It seems a pity that Joseph Pearce, author of a new G K Chesterton biography, in which he tries to minimise his hero's anti-semitism, does not appear to have studied G K Weekly with greater care. The last issue of 1936 was concerned, in the authentic spirit of its founder, with "the reaction of Israel against the Government of Berlin" which "still awaits the order to mobilise", but (it was confidently foretold) "that will come" because "close observers say that, from the first attack to the counter offensive, there should be a delay of four years. We shall see. 1937 is the fourth year."

We did see. Fortunately, on this occasion, G K was spared the humiliation of having made a fool of himself. For by that time he was dead. But the anti-semitic evil that he often spoke and wrote of lived after him.

The newspaper cuttings reproduced above and left (Top, Sunday Telegraph 1/12/96. Left, Sunday Telegraph 8/12/96.) were partly the result of Candour's very determined effort to 'spread the word', particularly in the last six months of 1996. (See next page for further details.) Below we reproduce the unpublished letter sent to the Editor of the Sunday Telegraph by Miss Rosine de Bouneville, the Editor of Candour, which was acknowledged by a curt postcard.

The Editor
Sunday Telegraph.

Dear Sir,

The name of A.K. Chesterton has lately appeared in your correspondence columns and I was surprised to see that not one of the writers had enough acquaintance with the subject to know that the late, great, A.K. Chesterton's christian names were ARTHUR KENNETH and that his relationship with GILBERT KEITH Chesterton was that of first cousin, once removed. i.e. they had the same grandfather.

When A.K. first came from South Africa and introduced himself to G.K. Chesterton the latter expressed himself "delighted to meet so germane a relative".

Yours Truly,

Ex-League of Empire Loyalists.
Rosine de Bouneville.
